The State Run Portuguese Postal Activities

In 1798 Dona Maria I, the Queen of Portugal purchased the Postal Monopoly run by the Da Matta family for the State. The decree was signed January 20, 1798. Two specific lines were created for the Brazil route, the North Line to serve the Northern Coast from Pernambuco and the South Line to serve the East Coast from Bahia down to Rio de Janeiro. The 80 reis ship rate was the longest lasting one in the history of Brazilian mail - 55 years.

The British - Brazilian Convention was altered in 1853 to establish the Royal Mail Steamers could transport Brazilian Mails between the coastal ports, especially Pernambuco, Bahia and Rio de Janeiro. The British credit would be 120 reis per ½ ounce. In 1866, with the issue of the Dom Pedro's, the Post regulated a single rate of 220 reis to be paid in Brazilian adhesives: 100 reis for internal postage and 120 reis to reimburse the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company.

Thomas W. Evans and The French Empress Eugenie

Thomas W. Evans (1823–1897) was an American Dentist. He performed dental procedures on many heads of state, including Napoleon III and received numerous medals for his dentistry, including the Grand Croix of the Légion d'honneur.

Evans became famous for having assisted Eugenie, Empress of the French, Regent and wife of Napoleon III, in escaping from Paris on September 4, 1870 the day after the Second Empire had collapsed. The Battle of Sedan on 1 & 2 September ended as a disastrous defeat for the French army, with the Emperor surrendering with 100'000 troops. On the following day, the news from Sedan was confirmed by a telegram from Napoleon III. He had been captured by the Prussians, and, as a Prisoner of War, was already on his way to Germany. In Paris a revolution was in the making. Rioters were shaking the gates of the Place du Carrousel and the palace gardens, crying "Down with the Spaniard. To the guillotine! Death to Badinguet!" (The Empress was of Spanish birth; 'Badinguet' was a derisive nickname for Napoleon III).

Napoléon III

Empress Eugenie

Whilst hostile crowds gathered near the palace, the staff began to flee and the Empress and Joseph Bonaparte's grandson, Louis Joseph Benton, escaped with one of her entourage and sought sanctuary with her American dentist, Thomas W. Evans. In the early morning of September 5, Evans took Eugenie from his villa 'Bella Rosa' by coach to Deauville. From there, on 7 September, she sailed across the Channel on the yacht 'Gazelle' to England. From 5 September 1870 until 19 March 1871, Napoleon III and his entourage of thirteen aides were held in comfortable captivity in a castle at Wilhelmshöhe, near Kassel. Eugénie later travelled, incognito, to Germany to visit her husband in Kassel.

- 5219 PSNC / River Plate Line 1873 (July 20): 'Tübli' stationery envelope 10 rp. carmine red from Trogen to Buenos Aires, endorsed "via Bordeaux", franked by Sitting Helvetia 10 rp. red (SBK 38) and 20 rp. orange (four examples of SBK 32, one with corner fault), tied by "TROGEN 20 V 73" despatch cds in black with "P.P." in black and French "SUISSE 22 JUIL. 73 BELFORT" entry cds in blue alongside. Reverse with Zürich transit cds. Cover transported from Bordeaux to Montevideo with PSNC steamer "Araucania", from there with River Plate Line steamer to Buenos Aires. The stationery's indicium is severely impaired, minor cover toning in addition, nevertheless a desirable cover, correctly franked in the October 1865 rate from Switzerland via France to the receiver in Argentina.

PSNC / River Plate Line 1873 (20. Juli): Tübli-Ganzsachenumschlag 10 Rp. karminrot, versandt von Trogen nach Buenos Aires, Leitweg "via Bordeaux", frankiert mit Sitzender Helvetia 10 Rp. rot (SBK 83) und 20 Rp. orange (vier Einzelwerte der SBK 32, einer davon mit Eckfehler), farbfr. und vorab gut gez., klar und übergehend entw. mit Abgangsstp. "TROGEN 20. VII. 73" mit nebenges. "P.P." in Schwarz und blauem franz. Grenzübergangsstp. "SUISSE 22 JUIL. 73 BELFORT". Rückseitig Transitstp. Zürich. Der Brief wurde von Bordeaux nach Montevideo mit dem PSNC-Dampfer 'Araucania' transportiert, von dort nach Buenos Aires ging es mit einem Schiff der River Plate Line. Der Wertstempel ist stark beschädigt, das Wappen herausgefallen, das Kuvert ist minim getönt. Nichtsdestotrotz von der Gesamterscheinung her ein ansprechender Brief aus der Bodmer-Korrespondenz, korrekt frankiert im Tarif von Oktober 1865 für einen Brief aus der Schweiz über Frankreich bis zum Empfänger in Argentinien.

PANAMA

ACROSS THE ISTHMUS FROM THE PACIFIC TO THE ATLANTIC OCEAN

Experiences of the German businessman C.A. Pajeken on his journeys from San Francisco to Europe via the Isthmus of Panama before and after the opening of the Panama Railway.

Map showing the mule path from Panama to Gorgona (in red) and continuing by boat along the river Chagres (in blue)

By mule from Panama to Chagres (1850)

It was January 1850 when I arrived in Panama on a steamship from San Francisco. There were over four hundred of us passengers. Most were Californian gold miners, many of whom had made the journey across the American prairies and were hardened to privations of all kinds.

As soon as the steamer had anchored, fifty to sixty boats swarmed around from all directions. The boatmen shouted the price of the ferry fare to the passengers, each trying to out-shout the other. After the mail, the express goods and cabin ladies had disembarked, the other passengers, six or eight at a time, got into boats and left the steamer amid the deafening noise.

Panama is situated on land that is not very high above sea level. The city is completely enclosed by low, partly weather-worn city walls, from which a high fortress protrudes on the seaward side. The larger ships must anchor a mile out from the coast. From here, the passengers and their luggage are taken to the beach in boats.

We stayed at the Louisiana Hotel. It was run by an Italian who gave us a good lunch at moderate cost. Then we hired saddle- and pack animals as well as porters for us and our luggage, for which we paid twelve to sixteen dollars for each animal or man from Panama to Gorgona (nine leguas). As this was the dry season we went to Gorgona, which is three leguas below Cruces on the Rio Chagres. The way there goes first through a flat valley, which is covered on both sides with dense bushes and large trees. Many heaps of rubble rise up from the lower heights like ruined castles. These are the ruins of the homes of rich planters who cultivated this area under Spanish rule; the Republic drove them out, destroyed the houses and turned the area into a wilderness.

The road continues to wind through narrow, marshy valleys. Then we crossed a small river where riders, pedestrians and animals eagerly enjoyed a cooling drink, for the sun was already high in the sky and the thermometer already showed 29 degrees in the shade. At three o'clock in the afternoon we reached the plateau of the isthmus, a densely forested plateau where there was a hut made of cane and a linen tent. Our muleteer explained that we would have to spend the night here because we would not be able to reach Gorgona that evening due to the rough road and the poor condition of our animals. We dismounted, put our luggage in a pile and let our animals graze in the shade of the trees. Towards evening we set up camp for the night. Everyone lay down on the grass with their luggage, but sleep was out of the question. With the dawn, packing began again.

Trail from Panama City to Gorgona

On the river Chagres

Before we reached Gorgona, we saw a large, barrack-like building on a cleared height. This was for the workers of the then projected railway. Four hundred Irishmen had come from New York. But after a few weeks half of the workers had died; the other half were sick and unable to work. As day broke, those who had hired boats embarked. I too tried to get boats for myself and my companions. Finally I agreed with a boat owner a price of twelve dollars per person. We then dragged our belongings into the wretched boat, which was loaded almost to the point of sinking with the six passengers, the owner, two oarsmen and our luggage. The journey continued downriver with the current, but the water was so shallow that we often had to get out and pull the boat over the sand. We constantly heard shouting and the sound of shots, for the boatmen and travellers were very noisy. The Americans amused themselves by shooting at birds with revolvers. We had taken some provisions with us from Gorgona. We were able to enjoy our meal in peace during the journey in the shade of a parasol.

When it became too dark to continue without danger we landed at a small village called Gatun. There were thirty to forty boats there with travellers who had come from Gorgona. At three o'clock in the morning, our boat reached Chagres, situated at the mouth of the river of the same name. We pulled our boat ashore and were happy finally to breathe fresh sea air again. When daylight came, we crossed over to the left bank, then known as the American side. There were a number of shacks here, almost all of which were run by American innkeepers. We brought our things ashore, paid the boat owner, had an expensive and poor-quality breakfast and then hired a boat to cross over to the steamship. Our boat was one of the best, four sturdy blacks rowing it through the high surf against the strong north-easterly wind. After half an hour we were standing on the high deck of the steamship "Empire City", which took us to New York in fourteen days, after taking on coal in Kingston, Jamaica.

On the Panama Railway from Panama to Aspinwall (1855)

It was March 1855 when I arrived back in Panama on a return trip from California to make the journey across the Isthmus. But what changes had occurred in those few years! What British and French engineers had declared an impossibility had been accomplished in an unprecedentedly short time by the enterprise of practical Yankees. The railway that had been projected five years ago, connecting the Pacific with the Atlantic, was finished and in operation.

So now, to cross the isthmus has become an enjoyable journey, though admittedly still very expensive because of the Panama Railway Company's monopoly. The fare is twenty-five dollars for each person and ten cents for each pound of luggage (in recent times, fifty pounds of luggage have been accepted). Nevertheless, the journey is cheaper than it was a few years ago, when it was also associated with a great loss of time, much discomfort and many dangers.

The Summit of the Panama Railroad

The small transfer steamboat that was supposed to take us from the ocean steamer directly to the railway was under repair, so we landed in small boats as in earlier times, and then had to walk to the city. Here all the luggage was weighed and the freight charge paid at fifteen cents a pound, for we were still cheated out of five cents. Every little thing was put on the scales; even my weapons and a cage with birds were not exempt. Everything was done with unbelievable speed, and the traveller who had already bought his ticket was treated worse than an item of freight. We then got into the railway carriages, which we liked as there are no classes here. Soon the journey began and we whizzed through the swamps which, apart from the garlic smell of the herbs, gave off a most unpleasant haze. After two hours we stopped on the plateau of the summit, where there were some houses.

Although the stop lasted almost half an hour, no one was allowed to get off to refresh themselves in the great heat. When the conductor was asked how long the train would stop, he replied curtly: "I don't know".

We then arrived at the Rio Chagres. The journey continued a few miles along the left bank, and then the train crossed the river on a very strong wooden bridge. We reached Aspinwall 4½ hours after our departure from Panama. Unfortunately, the steamship "George Law", which was to take us to New York, had not yet arrived. Therefore, our group of four travellers rented a room with four camp beds for twenty-four hours for which we had to pay five dollars. We put our luggage, weapons and menagerie inside and while one of us kept watch, the others enjoyed the fresh sea air.

Railway Bridge on River Chagres

The next morning, the expected steamship arrived and docked at the landing stage. A hundred paces away, the railway stopped and brought six hundred passengers, their luggage, the mail, and much merchandise. The steamship had suffered damage to the engine, which was repaired in a workshop at the end of the railway. Late in the afternoon a cannon was fired as a signal that the passengers could go aboard. We walked on to the ship through an indescribable crowd of porters, passengers, fruit and parrot sellers, pickpockets and agents and proceeded to the designated rooms.

buildings are wooden sheds and there is no sign of railway employees. The carriages are practical and comfortable, the locomotives very large and even magnificent. The station, if you can call the Panama departure point a station, is right next to the sea. The end of the railway on the Atlantic side is directly on the pier, where the steamships load their largely live cargoes.

The Panama Railway, like almost all North American railways of its kind, is not built for the future. Station

The whole length of the railway is 57 miles. The greatest ascent is from the Pacific side to the summit, and is 60 feet in a mile. On the Atlantic side the greatest rise is in the valley of Obispo, near the plateau, where it is 58.9 feet in a mile. The highest point of the line is 263 feet above the mean high tide of the Atlantic Ocean.

The point where the railway reaches the Atlantic side is a few miles east of Chagres (which is now in terminal decline). The town now rising there is called Colon (Columbus) by the inhabitants of New Granada, but the North Americans call it "Aspinwall" after one of the owners of the steamships sailing between there and New York. The town is situated on a promontory or island by the sea on soil which, like the whole valley, consists of sand, broken shells and coral. So far it consists of wooden houses. The mixture of races is almost as great as it was in California at the time of the first mass immigration: Coloureds, Creoles and Mestizos from the coast of New Granada and many West Indian islands, plus North Americans, Spaniards, British, French, Germans, Italians and Jews from all parts of Europe.

Terminus of the Panama Railway Company in Aspinwall

The location of the city of Aspinwall, being the terminus of the railway linking two oceans, justifies the expectation that in the not too distant future it will become one of the most important trading centres of the New World.

Reverse with LIMA arrival cds (Nov 1, 1871). RMSP steamer 'Nile' from Southampton to Colon, PSNC steamer from Panama to Callao. Accountancy markings in red crayon were erased, part of the cover at top right was supplemented, the endorsement was redrawn in this position, presumably an additional 1 kreuzer stamp was located there. The strip of three 30 kreuzer adhesives shows some perforation split, one 9 kr. stamp is glued around the cover corner, however for a franking of that sheer size it is of a very attractive appearance. The '3' in red crayon for the third weight rate is still lightly visible at the right of the 9 kr. stamp, the franking should have been three times 59 kr., thus the cover is underfranked by one kreuzer. In spite of its imperfections, a most impressive Shipmail cover from the well-known Cohen correspondence and a rarity of Baden postal history. Signed Ebel, Philipp Kosack, Pfenniger & Richter; cert. Stegmüller (2015).

"MANNHEIM 28 SEP. 10-12 M", nebengesetzt roter gefasster "P.P.". Mit RMSP - Schiff 'Nile' von Southampton nach Colon, mit PSNC - Dampfer von Panama nach Callao. Verschiedene Weiterfranko-Rötel ausradiert, der Umschlag rechts oben ergänzt, der Leitvermerk dort nachgemalt, zudem klebte hier wahrscheinlich ein weiterer 1 Kreuzer-Wert. Die Zähnung des Dreierstreifen angetrennt und mit Bearbeitungs Spuren, nichtsdestotrotz eine eindruckliche Frankatur. Der Gewichtsvermerk '3' als Rötel noch leicht neben der 9 Kreuzer - Marke zu erkennen, für eine Brief dieser Gewichtsstufe hätte das Porto über Preussen und England 177 Kreuzer betragen (176 Kr. davon verklebt). Eine beeindruckende Gross-Frankatur mit seltenem Streifen der 30 Kreuzer - Marke.
